Commentary

The Select International Alpha Fund returned -0.62% for the month to be up +9.28% over the past year (net, after fees).

While there is a clear slowdown in the economic data, the key theme is an overall slower pulse and momentum. Despite this, global equity markets are holding up well in anticipation of the start of the US Fed Fund rate cut cycle and the resilience of aggregate US profits.

When the Fed begins the well flagged rate cut in their September FOMC meeting, it will be supportive for the highly leveraged sectors and companies in the economy. The Fed stimulus will match the monetary easing that has already begun from other key global central banks including the ECB, BoE and BoC. These central banks have not had the same degree of resilience in their economies as the US. The EU region, the UK and Canadian economies have slowed more than the US and hence started to ease their interest rate settings although inflation risks do remain.

The key message for markets is that after the most aggressive interest rate hike cycle in a generation to deal with the alarming inflation risks, there is some relief coming. The synchronisation of global easing by the key global developed market (DM) central banks is now matching the ongoing stimulus from the China central bank, the PBOC. This supportive global monetary policy easing cycle is a key support for future conditions and risk asset prices.

However, there are some concerns regarding the China slowdown as their economic momentum continues to weaken further. The largest property construction collapse globally continues to be a drag for China and sentiment remains weak. The positive part of the China economy is their export sector continues to be the lowest price exporter of the key green transition energy that the world has signed up for. However, trade conflicts look set to continue on this front.

There are still some key core services inflation risks and markets need to be cognisant of these risks. Hence the current easing cycle is anticipated to be a long, measured and shallow easing cycle. Despite lower cash rates from many central banks, the rate settings, while lower, will still be well above rates many investors and households have been conditioned for over the past fifteen years. The market may be pricing in too many rate cuts given the data.

There are some outliers. The BoJ are in a rare interest rate hike cycle after nearly forty years of negative cash rates. This will continue to be supportive for the Yen as it has been for the past six weeks. Also, the RBA has some stubborn and sustained core inflation following the ongoing fiscal stimulus and will need to keep the cash rate elevated until well in the first half of 2025 placing even more pressure on some Aussie households.

The overweight and focus on disruptive technologies is the core investment theme from the London based investment team lead by Mark Hawtin (who have managed this fund since January 2023).

The global Fund remains overweight to quality Tech (including AI and cloud) which have been key contributors to the performance. Overweights include Microsoft (MSFT), Alphabet (GOOG), Meta (META), Seagate Technologies (STX), PayPal (PYPL), and Apple (APPL).
